

Why rehash the facts?

When the Civil War began, picnickers drove out in their carriages to watch the battle of Manassas. It was the closest they could come to live coverage of the news, seeing as they had no Bernard Shaw to report the carnage from his high-rise hotel room.

Although coverage has improved, in some aspects it has gone too far.

We have come from radiotelegraphy reports being the only link between a shocked nation and the survivors of the

UNIVERSE OPINION

Titanic disaster, to the Vietnam War shooting and burning its way into America's living rooms every night via television.

Now the whole world watches CNN as broadcasters, at the government's cue, have changed their logos from "Operation Desert Shield" to "Operation Desert Storm," and have provided endless coverage of the events and non-events of the war.

It is almost like being there—sitting on a hill overlooking the battle, with a wicker basket full of chicken. But there is a difference between the Civil War's horrified chicken-munchers and today's. Today, the demand for news exceeds the facts.

To give news-hungry people information, the media complies with "media chowder"—news made up by rehashing the bony-ribbed facts and desperate interviews of "experts."

Time magazine summed up the media situation in its Jan. 28 issue: "The gulf conflict—the first full-scale war fought in the age of worldwide satellite communication—is being relayed immediately, moment by moment: every air-raid warning, bombing sortie or peep from the diplomatic community resounds across the globe as it happens. Already the bombing runs and air-raid warnings have begun to grow chillingly routine, and the stretches of live coverage have become somewhat repetitive and less urgent."

In an interoffice memo, written in the 1970s, the Washington Post's ombudsman, Richard Harwood, asked a question that needs to be asked now: "Is there any way to meet the obvious demand for 'news' while avoiding the pitfalls of offering fluff as a substitute for 'news'?"

The answer is "yes." The time has come when the media needs to admit it has given the facts as it knows them, — and refuse to speculate over, squeeze or rehash the facts it has already reported. The information-addicted society will ultimately thank them for it.

Worthless bashing

To the Editor:
Reading the letters, "A time for war" and "A time for peace" made me realize how ridiculous the methods in this battle are getting. Both sides are attempting to justify their position by using the scriptures. However, there is such a wide range of positions presented, that no one possibility can be considered most appropriate based on the scriptures alone. Nephi was instructed to kill Laban, while Alma was constrained by the spirit to allow innocent believers to perish by fire. Certainly there are countless instances both supporting war and decrying it. Clearly the Lord does not give one solution, everything formula for war. Believe what you want, but don't go running to the scriptures as your main point.

Press problems

To the Editor:
The editorial on news media reporting, on Jan. 30 in The Daily Universe, was full of inaccurate statements.

The news media during the last presidential election gave the public a clear picture of their inability to be objective. Warped emotional tirades were common. The facts or truth of the matter were more often ignored than made use of.

Several reporters from the Vietnam War have admitted now that many of their news reports were dishonest. Many of the so-called significant facts reported against our soldiers and the American military leadership have now been clearly shown as false information coming from communist-influenced sources.

The communist Tet Offensive turned into a great victory for our soldiers. However, even though the true facts were readily available, it was widely reported by the media as a victory for the communists.

The news media put great pressure on congress to bring our troops home from Cambodia even though the people there desperately needed us. The terrible, brutal genocide which took place brought few apologies from the news media or congress, and very little was said by congress or the news media about what took place.

The track record of our news media, including television, is very poor and it will take a lot of rebuilding and repenting before the public can fully trust them again.

Think ahead

To the Editor:
During Fall Semester 1990, Ghetto Magic Athletic Club wanted to put together a flag football tournament with BYUSA as a co-sponsor. BYUSA asked that a lengthy proposal be written, outlining every detail of what would be needed to run a successful tournament. Ten to 15 hours were put in each week for three weeks writing and rewriting the proposal so that it met all the demands of the BYUSA presidency.

Brett Blake thought it was a great idea. Once I finished the proposal, I presented a copy to each member of the BYUSA presidency. They wanted time to look through the proposal before I officially met with the presidency. Later, I was given two minutes to discuss the proposal with the entire presidency. The presidency liked the proposal and agreed the tournament would be something that would be good for students.

A few days later BYUSA informed me that they had rejected the proposal. For what reason, I asked. Brett Blake had forgotten he made an agreement with BYU's P.E. Services not to co-sponsor any events that included the use of BYU athletic fields.

The BYUSA president had forgotten he had made this agreement. Did he not see me every other day, painstakingly working with his staff organizing the event?

Despite its loss of respect for BYUSA, Ghetto Magic went ahead with the plan and held the event.

BYUSA, the next time an eager student comes to you with an idea, or once, try thinking before you speak. It may help. Then again, it may not.

Sexist hunt

To the Editor:
On Jan. 24, the ASA Sportsmen, a BYU social club of which I am a member, held a scavenger hunt of a curious nature. Its goal was to find different types of girls who had certain qualities, such as a color of hair, for example. The club members were then to bring the girls to the movies where each team tallied points to determine the winner.

Unfortunately, one of the female participants was offended by the sexist nature of the activity, and in afterthought, I, too, became offended by the demeaning role in which the club members held these daughters of our Heavenly Father. They were used as points. It is sad that it took an experience such as this for me to realize the error of my ways.

This problem is not apparent only in this instance. There seems to be a university-wide sentiment that women are here to be exploited for the cheap entertainment of the men. I think that it is about time that the other social organizations, as well as the male student body as a whole, begin to understand that we have an obligation to our mothers to treat the young women of BYU, and everywhere else for that matter, not as points in a scavenger hunt, but as the future wives of our fellow men. I would hope that somewhere in the world there are young men treating my eternal partner with the respect I would demand for her.

Baghdad endures bombings; Iraqis optimistic

EDITOR'S NOTE — This dispatch was cleared by Iraqi authorities in accordance with military security rules.

Associated Press

BAGHDAD, Iraq — Relentless allied bombing raids have pushed the city of the Thousand and One Nights into the past.

Horse-drawn carts replace cars, water is drawn from the Tigris River, twigs are gathered for fuel.

The once-bustling capital, with a peacetime population close to 4 million, is without electricity.

Its discos and nightclubs are shut down, and people head home before dusk, going to bed early because candles are costly.

After more than three weeks of allied air raids, residents suffer from shortages of food, drinking water, medicine and fuel.

But the Iraqis are still optimistic and are learning to cope with the deprivations and the almost nightly raids. Some play dominoes to pass the time, others are learning to play chess.

Near the market, outside the 1,200-year-old al-Khadamia mosque where President Saddam Hussein often went before the war, a woman shouted at the top of her voice: "We can fight for 10 years!" But she also said: "Tell America we do not want war! Stop this bloodshed!"

"We really want to stop the war, but not under America's order," said Mrs. Hamid, whose husband is in the army in Kuwait, ready to fight the U.S.-led multinational force.

"We love our leader. He's our heart," she said of Saddam as officials of Information Ministry, who took a group of journalists on a tour of Baghdad, stood by.

NEWS DIGEST

Compiled from staff and news service reports

Ground war could begin in 3 weeks

DHAHRAN, Saudi Arabia — As allied pilots bombed Iraqi troops and their supply lines Sunday, a senior American military official said the U.S.-led forces could use another three to four weeks to prepare for a ground offensive.

Defense Secretary Dick Cheney, meanwhile, said the next phase of the Persian Gulf War would probably combine air power with both ground and amphibious combat. But he would not say how soon it might begin.

In Iraq, President Saddam Hussein made his first nationwide broadcast to his people since three days after the war began.

Speaking on Baghdad radio, he congratulated them for withstanding the attacks by the allied "warplanes of shame." He told them their valor was inspiring the hundreds of thousands of Iraqi soldiers at the front.

In the air campaign, the Americans lost their first warplane in combat in more than a week. The Marine Corp AV-8 Harrier was downed over southern Kuwait on Saturday, and the pilot was missing, the U.S. command said.

Taking advantage of improving weather, American warplanes flew 2,800 missions Sunday, concentrating on Republican Guard troops on the Iraqi-Kuwaiti border and the bridges, highways and railways used to supply them.

The fierce action in the air, and sporadic exchanges of artillery along the Saudi border, came as Cheney headed back to Washington to brief President Bush on the progress of the 25-day-old war.

He told reporters flying home with him that the air campaign had reduced the fighting power of some Iraqi divisions by as much as 40 percent.

Although Cheney did not say when a ground and amphibious assault might begin, a senior American military official said some U.S. forces just arrived in Saudi Arabia and they need three or four more weeks to prepare.

"The guys just off the boat, they could use some more time," the official told The Associated Press in Riyadh on condition of anonymity. He was referring to the ground units recently arrived from Europe. Such forces have the specialized M-1 battle tanks designed to take on Iraq's Soviet-made T-72 tanks.

Iraq said it would welcome a ground assault by the allies, who now have about 700,000 soldiers in the region, including 505,000 Americans.

Soviet army calm after Lithuanian vote

VILNIUS, U.S.S.R. — Lithuania reported no signs of new Soviet troop movements Sunday, a day after voters overwhelmingly endorsed their republic's 11-month-old independence declaration.

President Vytautas Landsbergis called the poll victory "the next step on the road to independence" from the Soviet Union, and held out hope it would embolden nationalists in neighboring Estonia, Latvia and Russia to hold similar votes.

"Of course the results will encourage them," he told reporters early Sunday after staying overnight in the heavily fortified parliament building.

According to preliminary results, 90 percent of the voters said they favored becoming "an independent, democratic republic." Lithuania, like Estonia and Latvia, were independent for two decades between the two world wars before being annexed by the Soviet Union.

Soviet President Mikhail S. Gorbachev said last week the Lithuanian poll was "legally invalid." There was no Kremlin comment on the results Sunday.

Hatch urges direct ties with Baltics

WASHINGTON — The United States should forge direct diplomatic ties with the breakaway Soviet Republics, Sen. Orrin Hatch said.

"Those who sought above all else to help Gorbachev secure his grip on power made the mistake not only of pinning their hopes on a single leader, but also of picking the wrong man," Hatch said.

The senator, a new member of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, said he is concerned by Gorbachev's apparent backsliding on reform. The U.S. should try to bolster the Baltic states and others that are trying to form democratic governments, he said.

Gorbachev "did not seek genuine democracy, but only a controlled democracy that would ratify his policies."

"He did not seek to abandon socialism, but rather to revitalize socialism," Hatch said.

"The United States should seek to open in each Soviet republic that holds genuine free elections the same kind of nominally unofficial U.S. institute that has existed in the Republic of Taiwan for over a decade," he said.

"Such institutes, in turn, would allow us to develop further political and economic ties, and their mere existence would raise the political cost of further repression of the democratic republics by the Kremlin," Hatch said.

The senator maintains that reformists such as Russian Republic President Boris Yeltsin represent more people than Gorbachev does in the U.S.S.R.

"They (the Baltic states) have substantial control over their own economies and resources, and some are seeking to introduce their own currencies," Hatch said.

Kissing: A fine art with a fine past

By ANGELEE J. HARRIS
Lifestyle Editor

Thinking about kissing makes my lips curl.

After all, there are so many different types. Puppies give wet kisses. Teddy bears give furry kisses.

Hershey gives sweet kisses. Heroes give strong kisses, and oranges are sun-kissed.

Eskimos rub their noses to kiss, and Europeans kiss cheeks when greeting.

Pecks are suitable for old Aunt Sophy. Smooching is suitable for high school couples. S.W.A.K.s are appropriate for lonely love letters, and lingering kisses are saved for Valentine's Day.

There is a kiss for every situation, but how do you become the Don Juan, Rudolph Valentino, Elizabeth Taylor or Marilyn Monroe of kissing? How do you know which kiss to use and when? How do you know how passionate or long to make it?

It's all buried deep within the art of kissing — the art of kissing that may depend on how lightly your lips brush, how intensely your eyes meet, how fast your hearts beat and how gently your lips touch.

It may be easier to say what the art of kissing is not.

The art of kissing is not pouncing on your date.

It's not kissing when the TV is blaring or when your roommates are doing physical science homework next to you.

It's not kissing just to get a diploma from the virgin-lips club.

But, it's also not engaging in sinful soul kissing.

Or ruining the moment with giggles and gum.

Great kissers

The great-legend kissers honed the art of kissing to fine precision. The miserable-legend nonkissers keep looking for guidance.

Guidance from Adam and Eve, the world's first couple; Antony and Cleopatra, the general and queen; Lancelot and Guinevere, the roundtable knight and King Arthur's wife; Romeo and Juliet, a Montague and a Capulet; Abelard and Heloise, the teacher and pupil; Aucassin and Nicolette, the noble and the Saracen, and other immortals who live on in people's minds and in literature lines.

Not-so-great kissers

Then there are the failures. The miserable ones.

Cyrano de Bergerac and Roxanne, the big-nosed man and beautiful maid; Hamlet and Ophelia, the disturbed prince and pitiful victim; Rhett Butler and Scarlett O'Hara, the swashbuckling blockade-runner and Southern belle; Othello and Desdemona, the Moor and the Venetian; Helen of Troy and Paris, the most beautiful and the most love-stricken, and the other couples who never became the great-legend kissers.

Legends who knew when to kiss, how to kiss and why to kiss.

Legends who knew the art of lip brushing and lip touching.

Dating leaves casualties

Everybody plays the game

By LOIS DECKER
Universe Staff Writer

Dating can be like a tug of war — just one big jerk after another.

Male or female we all play the dating game. In fact, those who say they don't play games are usually the biggest players of all. However, the difference comes in what type of games we play.

"If the games are acquaintance games, they are fun all the time. They don't prevent you from developing sincerity and warmth," said A. Lynn Scoresby, associate professor in BYU's Family Science Department.

"However, if the games are to minimize your risks — if they are security games — then they are dangerous almost all the time, at least in terms of deepening a relationship," Scoresby said.

Sometimes disguised and sometimes not, acquaintance games are abundant at BYU. They range from "accidental" meetings on campus and getting in good with the roommates, to the old familiar, "Weren't you in my biology class last semester?" ploy.

Scoresby said in the beginning stages of dating it is not only fun but appropriate to play these kind of dating games to meet a variety of people.

However, people begin to see this same behavior as inappropriate when a person enters courtship, which is closer to mate selection than mere dating is, Scoresby said.

"If we want to meet somebody or attract their interest, we play dating games and they work. But let's suppose we've been dating for a while and feelings have started to develop. You've got to know where to stop the game playing and start the sincerity," Scoresby said.

Security games, sometimes known as low-risk tactics, include keeping a back-up list of other interests just in case a relationship falls through or playing mind games — especially for females — like, "I'm thinking about going on a mission. What do you think?"

Other low-risk behavior includes ego-boosting games such as trying to go out on as many dates as possible in one weekend. Or even the state game, where you try and date someone from each state in America during a semester. And the list goes on.

"It's a pretty natural tendency for us all to play low-risk. We like to take low risks and we hope the other person takes high risks," Scoresby said.

However, this "you-go-first" attitude can eventually be dangerous not only to the game player but to the game player as well.

"If the games are designed to minimize your risk and maximize others, then a person can learn that as a perpetual style, and you can never get into a relationship that has more feeling," Scoresby said.

"We have larger numbers of people who engage in low-risk strategies. That is why we have a larger number of people who are never married — they never get to the point where they will make a lasting commitment to each other," he said.

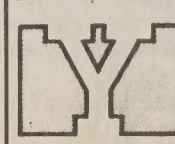

Whether looking for commitment or just plain fun, games can be either helpful or destructive, depending on their motive.

Perhaps the best strategy is to first evaluate why you're playing the game, and then learn from the knowledgeable Sherlock Holmes when he said, "Watson, the game is afoot."

Professor interprets for Bush

SHARISA STAPLES
Universe Staff Writer

BYU professor emeritus of history was witness to a historical event while serving as an interpreter for President George Bush when he met with President Ochirbat of the Mongolian People's Republic (MPR) in January.

Sechin Jagchid's duty as an interpreter for the Mongolian president's visit to the United States began in the Oval Office, where Ochirbat expressed his goodwill to the United States' efforts in the Persian Gulf.

Bush wants people to recognize the fact that in one year Mongolia changed from a one-party ruling state to a democratic state with no bloodshed, like Romania had to use," Jagchid said.

He said Ochirbat said they did not intend to use force or violence to achieve democracy, but asked for Bush's help to maintain this new government. He said the country changed in one year from a control economy to a market economy, a goal the Soviet Union has been unable to achieve.

Jagchid said at lunchtime, Bush was presented with a large scroll of a Bodisatva White Tara, which symbolized the liberation of thought in religion that was allowed to take place in Mongolia. Ochirbat said this gift represented his wish for good blessings and happiness for America.

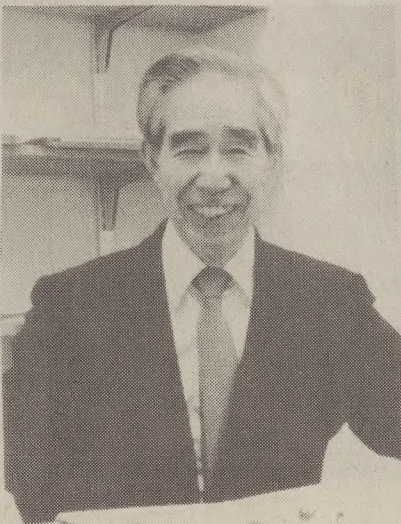

Jagchid said Bush presented Ochirbat with a birthday cake and explained to him the custom of blowing out the candles to make a wish. Ochirbat blew out the candles to celebrate his 49th birthday and wished for long lasting friendship between the two countries.

Jagchid said, "Mongolia has had a faster and more successful democratic process than the Soviet Union and Bush feels that this achievement deserves recognition. The MPR president felt it was necessary to ask Bush for technology support to help manage their new economy."

According to Jagchid, Ochirbat said the change in their country did not require violence because both the government and the people realized they wanted hope for their future, which required changing their system. He said they were more successful than the Soviet Union because they have a population that is smaller and easier to pull together to make a uniform decision.

"I was happy to be a part of a historical event in which the American government realized that Mongolia was the first communist country in Asia that successfully made a breakthrough without help or violence."

SECHIN JAGCHID

Abolish self-esteem, chairman says

VIOLA CANDIANI
Universe Staff Writer

While it is generally believed that people should have a high self-esteem, one BYU department chair believes self-esteem is bad and wants to abolish it.

Self-esteem in its true sense is a bad thing, no different than pride, said the chair of the philosophy department, James E. Faulconer.

The literal definition of self-esteem, to esteem yourself, prevents it from being good in any sense, Faulconer said.

Faulconer said he gained his view of self-esteem from studying philosophy, the history of religion and the scriptures. He discusses this view in a paper, entitled "Self-Image, Self-Esteem and Salvation."

From Draper, a BYU associate professor of family science, said the term self-esteem is generally to be useful most commonly appears in the popular media.

There is a misconception that the higher the self-esteem the better. Instead, the relative stability and slight narcissism in one's personal view of oneself is a better predictor of oneself achieving a better goal, Draper said.

People's potentials are realized when they are stable and optimistic. Whether having a high self-esteem helps in realizing one's potential is not known. Almost all claims where people say a high self-esteem helped them are unsubstantiated, Draper said.

Having a high self-esteem may or may not be bad, Draper said.

Having a realistic view of things may cause one to have a lesser view of self, thus a lower self-esteem. Also, setting unrealistic goals causes one's self-esteem to fluctuate between high and low, he said.

"Our goal should not be to increase self-esteem, but to stabilize it. Stability is better than the highness or lowness of one's self-esteem," Draper said.

Too much or too little self-esteem causes many people to act inappropriately.

Faulconer's approach to self-esteem is philosophical; my approach is more psychological, based on measurement and observation," Draper said. "Both approaches are completely legitimate."

Webster's New World Dictionary Third College Edition defines self-esteem as a belief in oneself or self-respect. Undue pride in oneself or conceit is the second definition.

"As it is defined and used, self-esteem is bad because it is teaching us as a society to be selfish and focus on ourselves, rather than on others," said David Jensen, 27, a graduate student in family science from Brigham City.

"Teaching others to continually evaluate their self-esteem is to teach them to continually look inward instead of outward," Jensen said. This contradicts what the Savior taught, he said.

"We use high or low self esteem as an excuse for not accepting responsibilities we have for others," he said.

Faulconer's paper is an excellent illustration of a meaningful way to live and be with others. In a very good way, Faulconer talked about love and why self-esteem is an incorrect concept in his paper, Jensen said.

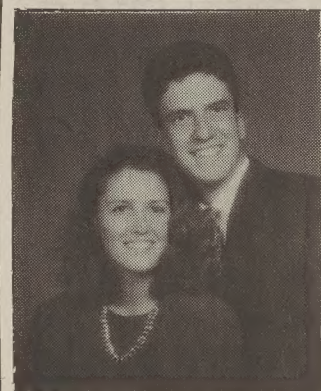

Jane Birch, 29, a graduate student from Sandy, said one of the main problems in society today is too much emphasis on oneself.

"When we dwell on ourself, we can't solve problems."

"We shouldn't be concerned if our self-image is good or bad. We shouldn't have a self-image, because when we focus on sustaining our self-image, we focus on ourselves instead of others."

Faulconer's whole point is that people shouldn't focus on themselves. Just because he doesn't believe people should have self-esteem doesn't mean they should have a bad self-image, Birch said.

Men's role in movies becoming nurturing

By TONYA L. CHRISTENSEN
Universe Staff Writer

The role of men in film is changing to a kinder, gentler nature, according to Sharon Swenson of the Theatre and Film Department, whose paper was presented Friday during the international conference on gender and the family.

Swenson's paper was presented by Tom Lefler of the Theatre and Film Department.

In earlier films, men were portrayed in violent roles, such as Arnold Schwarzenegger's action roles in "Terminator" and "Predator." These films show masculine, destructive power. It is literally without feeling, Swenson said.

Since then, other films have come along that have shown a switch to more tender, nurturing roles, Swenson's paper said. An example of this switch are Schwarzenegger's films "Twins" and "Kindergarten Cop." In "Twins," Schwarzenegger's character shows care and compassion toward his twin brother, played by Danny DeVito. This was a switch from the tough, rough image previously portrayed.

In Ron Howard's "Parenthood," Steve Martin reveals questions about his own parenting. The film demonstrates the "desire for closeness and the importance of male-female relationships," Swenson said.

In Howard's film "Willow" the same types of nurturing, caring feelings are displayed by males, according to Swenson.

In "Three Men and a Baby," the focus is on kisses and hugs as Ted Danson, Tom Selleck and Steve Guttenberg "discover that the pleasures of the flesh can include snuggling little baby Mary," according to Swenson. The film creates a new vision of the nature of family as the three men nurture the baby, her mother and each other.

In "Look Who's Talking," in addition to nurturing the baby, John Travolta cares deeply for his own father. A subplot shows how characters played by Travolta and Kirstie Alley learn to love each other while showing nurturing care for the grandfather, baby Mikey and each other, Swenson's paper said.

Even Indiana Jones shows caring feeling as he comes to terms with his aging father, played by Sean Connery, in "Indiana Jones and the Last Crusade." The nurturing of father and son plays an important balance, Swenson believes.

The transformation of male activities in film rescues men from the stereotype of being only active and aggressive, while it rescues women from the stereotype of being passive and victims, according to Swenson. Also, the transformation rescues gender itself from the constrictive, oppressive formation of the past.

The conference was sponsored by the BYU Women's Research Institute, the Center for Studies of the Family at BYU and the Utah Governor's Commission for Women and Families.

Genealogy library full of information

By REBECCA M. TAYLOR
Universe Staff Writer

Retired couples are not the only ones who do research in the genealogy department of the Harold B. Lee Library.

The Utah Valley Regional Family History Center, as it is officially called, is visited by many students taking family history classes, as well as students who come in on their own, said Diane Parkinson, director of the center.

"At least half of our patrons on a regular day are students," said Mavis Smith, volunteer consultant.

The center, which is preceded in size only by the family history library in Salt Lake City, contains academic as well as genealogical information.

Of the 350,000 microfilms at the center, 140,000 are academic collections, which include government collections, military records, newspapers and music, Parkinson said.

"We have all kinds of specialized subject matter that students can use for writing papers," Parkinson said. "Information can be used to write about something off-the-wall or to flush out background material."

Parkinson said students can find first-person reports of what life was like in a particular area during a specific time period.

Patrons wanting to do genealogical work can have access to the center's 210,000 genealogical films and more than one million microfiche, Parkinson said.

She said the new FamilySearch program is especially helpful.

Its instructions "can walk you through the program — if you can read, you can do it," Parkinson said.

She said the program is comprised of the international genealogical index, which provides access to records of all deceased persons who have had temple work done for them; the ancestral file, for family group records and pedigree charts; and the Social Security death index, which contains information about any deceased person who had a Social Security Number and a death benefit filed.

Students who would like to do family history research but do not know much about it should not feel hesitant about visiting the center, Parkinson said.

They should "just come to the reference desk and someone will show them how to get started." However, "they do need to come with a little bit of knowledge, like who their great-grandparents are."

Parkinson said in many ways comparing the center with the family history library in Salt Lake City "would be like comparing apples and oranges. We have our strong areas and they have theirs."

"We have more time to spend with our clientele," she said.

"Our people have more diversified knowledge."

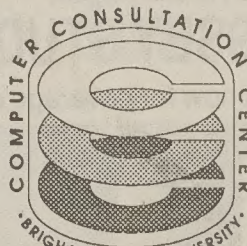

"In Salt Lake they have a specialist for everything."

Christine Jaffa, 19, a sophomore from Sandy majoring in nursing, said she visits the center two or three times a week in conjunction with a family history class.

"I'm just starting out so now it's a little difficult," she said. "Hopefully it will get easier."

Where is Prince Charming?

True gentlemen near extinction

By WENDY SEAL
News Editor

Cinderella had it good. After the most princely of men gallantly swept her off her feet, he combed the country to find his love and was willing to visit every household in the kingdom to return Cindy's lost slipper—what a gentleman.

But princes of the sort that Cinderella snagged seem hard to come by in the 1990s, and knights in shining armor are even more scarce. A rumor permeating social circles at BYU and elsewhere suggests that chivalry is all but dead.

Thirty-five female BYU students surveyed by The Daily Universe all agreed that true gentlemen are a breed on the verge of extinction.

"Chivalry is slowly dying," said Kathryn Flake, a 19-year-old sophomore from Globe, Ariz., majoring in nursing. Alison Evans agreed with the sentiment.

Evans, a 23-year-old senior from Findlay, Ohio, with a double major in elementary education and early childhood education, said gentlemen are among "the few, the chosen, the rare."

"I like the chivalrous acts I've seen, but I haven't seen enough. I think guys should work on being gentlemen on a daily basis—not just when they are on dates," she said.

"It's almost come to the point of not requiring or expecting good manners anymore. The importance of manners is not emphasized enough," Flake said.

The responsibility of etiquette training for men and women should be pinned on women, said Vivian Cline, a former Mrs. Utah and director of the Church Educational System's "Polish with Pleasure" program.

"There are no 'Joe Namath' schools of charm, but women are taught about manners inside and outside the home. They are the ones who should advocate and pass the practices on," Cline said.

Chivalry should be revived for the benefit of both sexes, she said. "Women absolutely love a man who is sensitive and foresees the needs of a lady without making a comment, without calling for recognition."

Cline used the scenario of a couple watching a football game on a cold day to illustrate her point. She said it's OK if the guy asks his shivering date if she's cold before offering her his coat, but "It's a real classy man who will simply put his coat around her shoulders without a word."

All of the female students surveyed said they are thoroughly impressed by the men who remember the little niceties.

"I really appreciate being treated with respect," said Jenny Carter, 19, a freshman from Idaho majoring in elementary education. "Things like opening doors, offering an arm or helping me with my coat mean a lot."

Evans said an element of risk is involved when guys adopt gentlemanly behavior because they have to "put their hearts on the line."

Campus is full of 'love spots'

By DAVID N. OLDHAM
Monday Editor

So you want to be alone with your sweetie on Valentine's Day?

Well before you spend your student loan on a romantic vacation for two, think about checking into one of BYU's many secluded love spots:

♥ The Maeser building has a cozy, upper level in the main lecture room. After hours it is usually abandoned leaving space for lovers.

♥ One choice area to recreate is the Harris Fine Arts Center. Frequently at the HFAC you'll find an abandoned piano room. The dark stages are also quite inviting. The curtains and stage scenery add an adventurous background. And if you are clever, you may even find the trap door that leads under the stage. If the stage doesn't suit you, try the balconies or the stair cases on the first floor.

♥ Let's say you are the athletic type—perfect—the Smith Fieldhouse and the Richards building will cater nicely to your needs. Try reserving a racquetball court. If you are daring, try the small area behind the poll vaulting mats.

♥ At the south end of campus, the botany ponds are always nice for a getaway, but the secluded picnic tables above the jogging path are more suited for those who aren't into PDA.

♥ Don't forget the Joseph Smith building. It's a veritable maze of pleasure—but be careful, you might get lost. If you don't have the courage to tackle the JSB corridors, try the auditorium. The American Heritage and Biology 100 classes won't even have a clue you and your sweetie are there.

♥ One of the greatest places of refuge is the Harold B. Lee library. The library is full of interesting corners between the book shelves on the lower levels—or should we call them lover levels?

♥ Study rooms are also inviting if you don't mind obnoxious people peeking in every now and then. I won't give any more information about the HBLL because the food cops might read this article. Take my word and explore the library.

There are hundreds of other secluded areas on campus you can go to be alone, but if I tell you all of them, where will my wife and I go?

Happy Valentine's Day sweetie.

The nightmare of dates

Editor's note: The names have NOT been changed so the guilty can get their act together.

By JACKI SORENSEN
Editorial Assistant

It was a date from hell—one of those dates that you try to purge yourself of, but always seems to return and haunt you.

"I met him in my history class. He seemed nice enough so I accepted a date. I should have known something was wrong when he told me we were going to double with his friend—then called a few days later to see if I could get a date for that friend," said Julianna Ward, 18, a freshman from Grand Junction, Colo.

The second clue that should have tipped Ward off was the fact that her date wouldn't tell her what they were going to do. "It was some big surprise," she said.

Ward got the date for her date's friend, and when they were picked up at 5 on Friday evening, the gentlemen (and I use the term loosely), informed the girls there would be no boy, girl, boy, girl seating. Ward sat in back with her friend, and her date sat in front with his friend.

"Two hours later we arrived at a cabin—his parent's cabin. When we opened the door, we were greeted by his whole family," she said.

No introductions were made.

After standing around for a while, wonder-date's mother finally asked the girls who they were. Then, his father took Ward and her friend out into the forest to show them where the outhouse was. "The cabin had absolutely no running water," she said. "Can you believe it?"

The lack of running water was a serious problem when they finally started making pizzas at 8:30 p.m.

"Everyone was slapping their hands in the dough. Hands that had been to the outhouse and who knows where else," she said. "It was gross."

When the pizzas were in the oven, Wonder-date pulled out his "game sack." It seems he had a large, brown paper bag filled with fun things to do.

"Our first activity was to make a mask—yes a mask. Fortunately he forgot to bring some scissors, so we were saved," she said.

With the mask game thwarted, Ward's date quickly ran back to the sack and pulled out a handful of green slime. "We were supposed to run around with sacks on our heads and throw the slime at each other, while at the same time trying to pull the sacks off each others head," she said.

The object of this fun game was to get the sack off another person's head so they would be "slimed."

At 9:30, the pizzas were ready to come out. "I was starving. We hadn't eaten since lunch," she said. "I was willing to eat some pizza, even if unwashed hands had made it."

But wonder-date must have thought the girls were on a diet, because he gave each of them a thin slice and gave the rest to his family.

"After we finished our tiny bite of pizza, we were informed we still had more games to play," Ward said. "He rushed to his game sack and pulled out some paper. We were going to do Origami—paper folding."

By this time, Ward and her friend had had it. The guys went outside for a minute. While they were gone, the girls started planning their escape. "We thought of every sick excuse we could to try and get them to take us home," Ward said.

When the guys finally came back, they were bombarded with reasons why the girls needed to get home. "It was then we realized that the guys were expecting us to spend the night," Ward said.

The girls finally prevailed and at 2 a.m. they were returned to their doorstep, tired, starving and sick. "The worst thing is, my date tried to get me to set up a study time! That was out of the question."

Obviously Ward's date had a great time. He's probably still trying to figure out why she didn't.

Practically engaged: A BYU oddity

BILL DERMODY
Universe Staff Writer

Last Valentine's Day I wasn't yet married to my beautiful wife. We weren't even engaged. But we were, at that point, in a state so commonly referred to at BYU as "practically engaged."

"Practically engaged" only exists here at BYU. Anywhere else, you're either engaged or you're not. But this state of limbo is fairly common in the land of Breed 'em Young University.

At BYU, after one date, you're "seeing" someone. After two dates, you're "dating" them and upon successful completion of the third date, you're officially "serious." But there still remains some confusion as to when a couple actually becomes "practically engaged."

It is my intention to clear up this confusion. In any case you have been wondering if you are "practically engaged" or maybe just practically "practically engaged," I have listed some symptoms of this BYU phenomenon.

You know you're "practically engaged" when:

- ♥ You get asked at least three times a day, "So when are you and Molly going to get married?" An appropriate response is the ever ambiguous, "Not this week."
- ♥ Your roommates no longer invite you on those weekend "trolling" expeditions to the various Provo hot spots.
- ♥ Your roommates go apartment-hunting for next fall and tell you nothing about it.
- ♥ Your bishop invites you to a "special fireside" at his house that none of your roommates know about. (For fun, you could ask a cousin of the opposite sex to attend with you.)
- ♥ Instead of constantly asking you, "How's Molly?" like they would normally do if you were merely "serious," people ask you, "Where's Molly?" when you are not with her. A good answer is, "She had to go to class right now. Would you like to see my scars?"

You are asked to speak on any of the following topics in church: Temple marriage, temples, covenants or obedience — with a special emphasis on President Benson's April 1988 conference talk, often mistitled, "Arise from the dust my sons, and be men."

Many of you may have noticed all these symptoms are things other people do or say — not what the "practically engaged" couple does or says. This is because, unlike being actually engaged, at BYU you have no choice as to whether you are "practically engaged" or not. That is for your ward and other friends to decide.

There are only two known cures for this condition:

- You can start "seeing" or "dating" someone else or you can become "actually engaged."
- I chose the latter.

Valentine's Day as a child— the memories live forever

VIKKI K. CARLSON
Universe Staff Writer

I woke up early the morning of Feb. 14. Valentine's Day had been circled in my bright red marker for weeks and now it was here. I was looking forward to the class party and giving my special valentine to Greg, the boy of my dreams. To a nine year old, Valentine's Day was one of the most important holidays of the year.

While contemplating the day's activities, my face started to itch. I scratched and then scratched again. The itch wouldn't go away. Curious, I hopped out of bed and peered in the mirror.

I screamed. My face was covered in bright red dots — a sure sign I wasn't going to school. The fourth-grade chicken pox epidemic had struck again.

I pleaded with my mother to let me stay home to school, if only for the party. I couldn't bear to miss the candy, the heart-shaped cookies and Greg.

My pleas fell on deaf ears as my mother packed me back into bed. I celebrated Valentine's Day that year huddled with holiday-pink calamine lotion.

Valentine's Day was very important to me as a child. My best valentine memories are from my childhood. In grade school my classmates and I made boxes to hold our valentines. These boxes were covered with art, lace and candy. One of my teachers had us make valentine pouches in elaborately decorated boxes and bags. We then traded them to each other and had a Valentine's day picnic. The trick was to remember whose mother made the best pouches.

Part of my delight in Valentine's Day was puppy love. While handing out and receiving the little paper valentines with their sappy puns, I always had high hopes that someone, perhaps the boy I'd been watching all year, would give me a special valentine. I never got one, but the excitement surrounding such a romantic holiday was half the fun.

For better or for worse, Feb. 14 is still one of my favorite holidays. It has survived heartbreak, disillusionment and rejection, any one of which is enough to give up on love.

As an adult, Valentine's Day has almost returned to the same simplicity I found as a child.

New ski fashions work on, off slope

Above: A model wears a geometric decorated parka and dark ski pants with a scarf wrapped around her head.
Right: An insulated vest with floral design stirrup pants and boots complete the new look in ski wear.

By SAMANTHA MCMILLEN
Universe Staff Writer

The new ski fashions will work as well on the streets as they do on the slopes.

There is new versatility as far as ski wear goes, said Laura Lynch, a merchandising editor for "Mademoiselle" magazine. The look that is high fashion in ready-to-wear is also popular in ski wear.

Lynch hosted the "Mademoiselle Ski Fashion Show" Saturday which was one of the highlights of the magazine's four-day

"Mademoiselle on the Mountain" promotion in Park City.

The show was informal, with a mood set for a casual apres-ski audience. Local models complimented body-conscious clothing that was believable and easy to look at.

The merchandise used in the show was from stores in the Park City area. Park City merchants offer some of the best of what is available in ski fashion, Lynch said.

The ski look for 1991 offers style as well as function due to technological advances that took place in the '80s. Skiers can look great as well as having the options of warmth and comfort.

New fibers used in ski clothing, such as Lycra, Gortex and Thinsulate, offer warmth with ease of movement because they are not bulky and constricting.

A lot of color was featured in this clothing with neon used in a kinder, gentler way as an accent, Lynch said.

Audience members seemed to be pleased that neon was working its way out of ski wear.

Cheerleaders do service

By MARJORIE ALLRED
Universe Staff Writer

Cheerleading doesn't just mean cheering at the games, it also involves service.

"They do a lot for the community and the university," said Lisa Arbon, the cheer squad director.

The cheer squad visits schools each semester to speak about topics such as the importance of education or how drugs are harmful to sportsmanship.

They also speak to seminary students at firesides.

The cheer squad members like the service, even if it does mean extra hours.

"I love it," said Ford Locey, one of the varsity yell-leaders. "It's one of the things I really enjoy about cheerleading."

At the presentations, members of the squad do several stunts and tum-bles and a pyramid that includes members of the audience, Locey said.

Cougar mascot, Cosmo, is also involved in service.

Cosmo is the founder of the Cosmo Cub Club which is targeted toward elementary school children.

The Cub Club encourages youngsters to write essays and letters and enter them in a contest.

Every month there is a drawing of all entries and the winner receives a prize, such as tickets to a game or a special activity with Cosmo.

All those who enter get a certificate commending them for their work, Arbon said.

Mari A. Kukahiko, also on the cheer squad, said sometimes it's tough to do everything, and she needs to manage her time carefully.

The squad stresses school as the No. 1 priority, Kukahiko said.

"All my top priorities have to be education," she said.

The cheer squad has practice three times a week for three hours. Members usually attend two games a week, which takes at least three hours, and sometimes they have to travel.

The squad tries to go to each school in the Western Athletic Conference at least once a year, Arbon said.

Though the school days missed are excused, it's hard to juggle performances and school work.

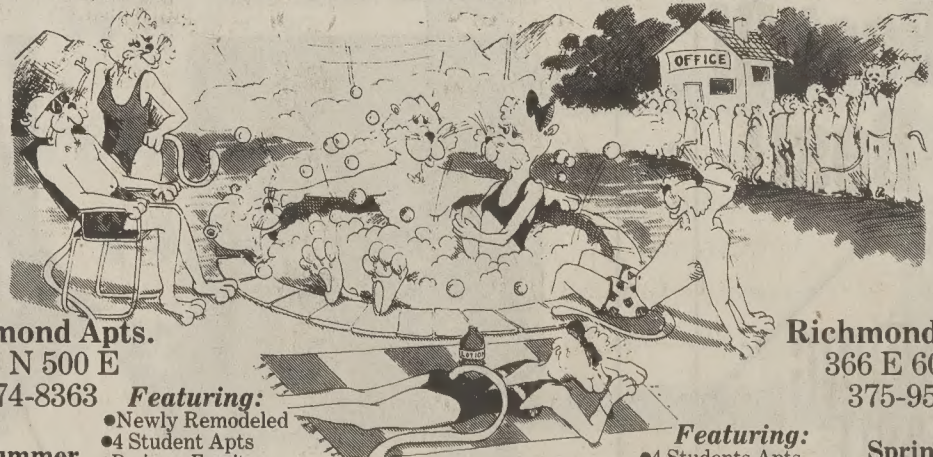

"Cheerleading is like a part time job," Locey said.

No scholarships are available to cheerleaders, so that isn't the incentive to cheer.

Nonetheless, they all seem to love it.

The squad will be giving a fireside to the Pleasant Grove Seminary Feb. 15, said Joseph Seeger, the cheer squad coach.

War doesn't stop foreign tours

PIERIN K. WAKEFIELD
Universe Staff Writer

Despite the outbreak of war in the Middle East, and travel cancellations as a result of terrorist actions, the Mormon Tabernacle Choir still plans to tour Europe and the BYU Young Ambassadors are still planning to visit the Soviet Union.

Everything is going according to schedule for the choir's trip in June, said Udel E. Poulsen, manager of the Mormon Tabernacle Choir.

We are moving forward with caution, but everything looks like it will be on schedule," Poulsen said.

It would take something drastic to happen in every city we will visit to stop us from going," he said.

Poulsen did say if something should happen in one of the cities on the tour, the choir would skip that city and go on to the next.

The choir is scheduled to visit Germany, France, Switzerland, Austria, Hungary, Czechoslovakia and Poland.

Mark J. Wakefield, specialist in funeral services for The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-day Saints and also a choir member, said in his opinion there has not been enough civil disobedience to stop the trip from taking place.

I am on the phone to Europe and the Middle East everyday in my work, and as far as I am concerned everything looks safe for the choir members," Wakefield said.

The April trip of the BYU Young Ambassadors to various cities in the Soviet Union is also still on the move, said Randy Boothe, director of the Young Ambassadors.

We are still making the necessary arrangements, despite all the terrorist attacks that have been happening all over the continent these days," he said.

Young Ambassador member Gene Lewis, a 22-year-old junior majoring musical dance theater from Sacramento, Calif., has faith that the group will be going. "I'm not scared because I know they wouldn't let us go if it wasn't safe," she said.

Group members hope things will quiet down because the Russian people are looking forward to their arrival, Boothe said.

The sponsoring presenters are excited and enthusiastic for the group's arrival, said Ed Blazer, director of performance scheduling, who just returned from the Soviet Union last week. "The Ambassadors are scheduled in the largest concert halls in every city," Blazer said.

"Many are three times the size of the de Jong Concert Hall in the HFAC," he said.

Boothe said that despite the remote possibility the trip would be canceled, practices have continued.

"They usually practice up to 12 hours a week," he said.

"The group is also learning Russian songs and we are having our script translated into Russian as well."

am glad there wasn't a bunch of Aztec or southwestern influence incorporated in the outfits this year. You've gotta say no to day after day," said Jason Thomas, a ski fanatic for Park City.

What will be seen now are jewel tones (deep blue, emerald green and red), primaries (blue, red, yellow, and white) and rich earthtones. They are put together in ways not seen before.

In addition to a change in color, there have been added to ski wear because they are big news in the fashion world now.

Aztec or southwestern influence was also apparent in many of the outfits shown.

Black remains the predominant color for ski pants since it works well with virtually any color.

Also has the ability to make the pants look longer and thinner, Lynch said.

The stirrup pant is regaining its popularity in ski wear.

Stirrup pants used to be worn exclusively for skiing, but in the last few years have shown up everywhere and are considered a fashion essential.

Velvet and fur (preferably fake fur) have given a textural appeal to winter styles.

Some of the most popular styles include parkas, parkies, anoraks (a longer coat with a drawstring or pulled in waistline), vests and slim pants.

"There is a tremendous assortment to work with to express an independent style," Lynch said.

"The main reason we like to put these events together is to show people new ways of putting things together they may not have thought of."

Rubber boots by Sporto were worn with all of the outfits.

These boots are made of Thermolite, a lightweight, non-allergenic material that keeps the feet dry so they will stay warm.

Door prizes and gift bags containing items from the promotion's sponsors were given away at most of the events.

This was the magazine's first trip to Park City and it turned out well.

"It turned out to be a great event. We've had a lot of fun with it," said Sherri Allen, a special events coordinator. Allen worked with Amy Bermant and several "Mademoiselle" stylists to coordinate the events.

BYU's Shawn Bradley and Gary Trost combine to block a shot by Hawaii's Mike Gilliss. The Cougars beat Hawaii 82-74 Saturday night in the Marriott Center.

Baseball team swept in Hawaii

By KEN MERRITT
Universe Sports Writer

The dense air of Hawaii and good pitching seemed to keep BYU's hitters at bay in a four-game series opener for the Cougars against the Rainbows of Hawaii.

The University of Hawaii pounded the Cougars 4-0 during three days of play sending BYU back four games in Western Athletic Conference play.

"We had about five bad innings that cost us the series," coach Gary Pullins said afterwards.

"We had signs of brilliance and then those flashes seemed to fade ... most of the mistakes we made are things we can iron out on the field," he said.

The series was the first time this year the Cougars got out of the Smith Fieldhouse and onto the field and the earliest WAC opening ever.

"It's a little tough on us some times, but is a fairly easy transition to move from indoors to the carpet in Hawaii," Pullins commented before the series.

BYU opened with sophomore right-hander Mike Nielsen. "We just fell apart and we didn't get any breaks," Nielsen said.

"We're a totally different kind of ball club from them, but the big thing was we just weren't ready ... we walked a lot of guys and they don't have a lot of power so they just chip 'em over the infielders' heads. It doesn't help us; it just puts us in the hole a little. Now we know what we need to work on," he said.

The Cougars dominated the Rainbows last year in a series at home winning three and tying one because of rain.

"You just can't hit home runs here. We hit a bunch that would've been home runs in Provo and one would have been a grand slam. The air is dense and the field is bigger than ours," Nielsen said Sunday in Hawaii.

"We feel pretty disappointed but we're still real positive." Hawaii opened its season last week at home with two victories and one defeat against the University of Washington putting them at 6-1 after the series this weekend. The Rainbows are traditionally a power in the WAC.

"We weren't quite up to it. We just played against the wrong ball club at the wrong time. ... I'm still real happy with this ball club. ... We're looking forward to coming home," Pullins said.

BYU will return to action Feb. 16 in Arizona and will have its first home game Mar. 15. The Cougars are idle in league play until Apr. 12 when they go up against the Falcons of Air Force.

BYU beats Rainbows; Schreiner scores 37

HANS WILD
Assistant Sports Editor

Steve Schreiner had a career game score of 37 points and lead the BYU men's basketball team to an 82-74 victory over the Hawaii Rainbows Saturday in the Marriott Center.

Schreiner who hit on 16 of his 21 shots and had 9 rebounds, admitted that he was pumped-up more than usual for this game.

"I have a loosing record against Hawaii and I wanted to end on a high," Schreiner said. "This could be the last time I play them and I wanted to pull it out."

With nine minutes left in the game and the scored tied 57-57, Schreiner scored 15 straight points for the Cougars to give them a 72-65 lead with four minutes left.

"Steve is a good, old-fashioned hard worker. The worst thing that can happen is to work hard and then nobody gives a biscuit. He has unselfish teammates who get him the ball," said BYU coach Roger Reid.

The Cougars led the Rainbows at halftime 43-38, before 22,848 fans.

In the first eight minutes of the second half, Hawaii had eight team fouls and only six points.

"It was a tough physical game early on and the officials were calling everything. It wasn't dirty basketball; we just like to play hard," said Hawaii coach Riley Wallace.

The Rainbows scored nine straight points from the 12:05 mark to tie the Cougars at 53-53 with 10:33 left. Chris Walz led the Hawaii surge and finished the game with 22 points, his career high.

Some of the highlights of the game were a three-pointer by 6-10 center

Gary Trost and a steal by Shawn Bradley.

Bradley intercepted a pass and drove the length of the court for a one-handed jam to start the second half.

Bradley finished with 18 points, 11 rebounds and five blocks.

His inside play caused a Hawaii player to receive eight stitches and another a broken nose.

"You can't back down. You can't let them think they have the upper hand even if they do," he said.

"I play with my elbows out and they are on a different plane than the other players," Bradley said.

"I have to dodge doorways. They have to dodge my elbows."

The next two games could decide the Cougars' future in the WAC race and for a possible NCAA bid.

They travel to play the New Mexico Lobos in the Pit on Thursday and then do battle with the University Utah Utes in Salt Lake City this Saturday night.

Gymnasts leap to victory

KEN MERRITT
Universe Sports Writer

The BYU women's gymnastics team dominated Boise State University in its first home meet of the season Saturday. The team won every event, giving only one second and one third place to BSU on the balance beam, which is usually BYU's longest event. This was the men's first team win of the 1991 gymnastic season.

The team achieved its goal of scoring more than 190.00 by earning 190.40 points to BSU's 184.60. The grace and precision of BYU gymnast Tammy Packard's floor routine earned her a score of 9.75. Packard won both the floor exercise and the balance beam, helping to push the team over their goal of 190.00 points.

"We were overtime on floor and I too many falls on beam or we would have had a 192.00," said assistant coach Dawn Cattermole. Cattermole's floor exercise team holds the school record for that event. "We had a lot of successes and a lot of things to be proud of. We know where our mistakes are ... our goal now is to score a 192.00," she said.

This was the first meet I hit the top of the podium, Carrie Burk said after exchanging hugs with team member and roommate Christy McAdams. McAdams won on the vault with a score of 9.75 and tied for first in the all-around competition with a score of 38.00 (40.00 points is a perfect score). "The highlight of the meet for me was performing in front of a home crowd," McAdams said.

Gymnast Jane Greenwood, who placed second on vault with a score of 9.65, said she did her best so far, but not every gymnast was as pleased as Greenwood was. Senior Marianne Squires, who took first on uneven bars and tied for first with McAdams in the all-around, was disappointed with her performance on the balance beam. "I started out kind of shaky on vault—I'm glad it's over," Squires said.

Squires earned a gold medal for her spectacular performance on the beam at the annual Purina Cat Classic last week in Minnesota.

The Cougars did not perform as well as usual on the balance beam, which is typically one of the team's strongest events. Gymnast Shauna Mertz agreed. "We had problems on the beam, we usually do better," she said.

The women gymnasts have improved steadily since their opening meet in Cedar City. The Cougars will face Boise State again on Friday in Boise, Idaho. The Cougars' next home meet will be Saturday Feb. 23 against UCLA.

Fredericks, track teams excel in meets

SHANNON LANDEN
Universe Sports Writer

The men's and women's track teams participated in the Nebraska meet and the Mountain States Classic in Pocatello, Idaho, over the weekend, making records and qualifying athletes for the NCAA.

Frank Fredericks was named the MVP of the Huskies Invitational in Lincoln, Neb., after he set two meet records and tied two stadium records Saturday.

Fredericks took first in the 200-meter dash with a time of 21.21 seconds, setting a new meet record and tying the stadium record.

Fredericks then came back and took first in his 400-meter race of the day, the 55-meter dash, in a personal best time of 6.15, setting a new meet record and again tying the stadium record.

BYU men's track coach Willard Hirschi said Fredericks' performance was excellent and said his accomplishments were comparable to a quarterback who throws for 400 yards in a game.

"He is really one of the world's greatest sprinters," Hirschi said.

Per Karlsson set a new meet record as well as a stadium record in the 35-pound weight throw, taking first in the event with a throw of 67 feet, 4 inches, while his teammate Brent Patera became an NCAA Provisional Qualifier in the same event. Patera took third in the event with a throw of 59-1/4.

"I was very pleased with their performance," Hirschi said of the team. "They know who they are and they know they can compete with the best. They did and excellent job."

The men took several third places including Russ Muir in the 800-meter run with a time of 1 minute, 52.07 seconds and Rick Jaster in the mile with a time of 4:11.67.

Kartsi Leppaluoto, the only representative in Nebraska for the women, earned first place in the shot put by breaking the old BYU school record of 51-7/8 with a throw of 52-4.

Leppaluoto's throw is currently the second best in the nation, according to the NCAA's ranking list.

The rest of the women's team easily defeated the competition in Idaho, scoring 136 points, while the nearest competitor, Idaho State, scored 84.

The win was welcomed by the Cougars after struggling in the Weber State Invitational, Feb. 2, where they took just two first places out of 12 events.

BYU women's track coach Craig Poole had remained confident, however, maintaining the women would be strong competitors in Saturday's meet. "It turned out to be a good meet, just like I predicted," Poole said.

In addition to a decisive win, two Cougars became provisional qualifiers for the NCAA at the meet. Anu Kaljurand qualified in the 55-meter hurdles, taking first with a time of 7.96, while Shu-hwa Wang qualified in the long jump, taking first with a leap of 20 feet, 1 inch, which placed her 3 inches shy of the BYU indoor record.

UNLV downs Arkansas in 112-105 bitter battle

Associated Press

Everything that might have helped against the top-ranked Rebels was there. Playing No. 2 Arkansas. On the road.

Even trailing at halftime for the first time all season. It didn't matter. With Stacey Augmon leading the Rebels with 31 points, the top-ranked "Rebels" ran away to a 112-105 victory over the Razorbacks on Sunday for their 31st consecutive win.

In ending the Razorbacks' winning streak at 20 games, UNLV withstood first-half pressure of a record crowd of 9,640 at Barnhill Arena and led on a 16-2 run to start the second half and take control of the game.

The Rebels (20-0) trailed 50-46 at halftime before seizing control and leading a 62-52 lead with 16:19 left.

UNLV, trying to become the first undefeated team since Indiana in 1976, defeated the Rebels in 1976, had beaten 19 opponents by an average of 32 points.

Arkansas tried to keep pace, but Stacey Augmon, Anderson Hunt and Larry Johnson—who totaled 82 points—didn't let them.

Arkansas (23-2) closed to 66-61 at 14:27 to play before UNLV tied it on again, scoring nine points and forcing the Razorbacks to use the last of their timeouts with 12:45 left.

UNLV extended the lead to 98-75 with 6:23 left and a late rally by Arkansas wasn't nearly enough. The Rebels became the eighth top-ranked team to win a No. 1 vs. No. 2 matchup in 10 meetings over 10 years.

With 2:27 to play, Johnson and Todd Day of Arkansas were ejected for unsportsmanlike conduct when a brief scuffle broke out.

Hunt had 26 points and Johnson 25, including 19 in the second half. Day led the Razorbacks, whose only other loss was to Arizona, with 26 points and Oliver Miller had 22.

In taking its halftime lead, Arkansas got its final 12 points on three-pointers, including Lee Mayberry's 45-second clock-beater with 13 seconds left. An 11-0 spurt gave the Razorbacks a 36-30 lead with 7:16 to play.

UNLV went 3:04 without a field goal as Arkansas' pressure defense forced three turnovers in the run and Miller asserted himself inside with a block of Augmon and a length-of-the-court bullet pass to Day for an easy dunk which capped the run.

The loss also snapped Arkansas' 19-game home winning streak.

It was the second meeting between the two schools. UNLV won last year, 101-93.

Before you buy any diamond, read this ad.

When looking for a diamond engagement rings I needed clear information to decide where to buy. There were "sale" prices, wholesale "deals" and these "friends" who said they could get me the "best price."

Wilson Diamonds gave me the information to sort through this confusion. They didn't play "sales" games, but gave me straight talk and prices below any of my "fantastic" deals.

It was clear to me why Wilson's has been in business longer than anyone. They know what they are doing.

What's more, they have Lazare Kaplan Ideal Cut™ diamonds. These are superior quality diamonds that are simply more beautiful than any other diamonds, anywhere, and you can only get one at Wilson's.

But don't think that the high quality of a Lazare will price them out of your range. At Wilson Diamonds they guarantee the lowest price anywhere, on any diamond, or your money back! They even offer an exclusive student finance plan.

So why did I need to settle for mediocre when I could have the best? I think smart people buy at Wilson's and always will.

Women's golf team travels south to compete in Arizona tournament

By SHAN NAKAMOTO
Universe Sports Writer

The BYU women's golf team left Saturday morning to compete in the University of Arizona Invitational Tournament that begins today and ends on Wednesday.

There will be 18 teams competing, seven of which are in the top 20 in the country. San Jose and Arizona are among the top 20 teams participating in the tournament.

BYU women's golf coach Gary

Howard said BYU came in seventh place in the tournament last year.

He said BYU will be competing against good teams that have the advantage of practicing outdoors because of their school's locations.

BYU, because of its climate, has had to practice in the Smith Field House.

Ruby Chico, Robin Barry, Lachell Simmons, Anna Hagborg and Sharon Probst will represent BYU in the tournament.

Chico, Barry and Simmons competed in the tournament last year.

Barry said this is her third year playing in Arizona.

She said BYU jumped from 12th to seventh place last year when BYU outplayed other schools on a cold last day of the tournament.

Hagborg, in her first year with the team, said she is excited and ready to go to Arizona.

She said the qualifying tournament a week ago in Palm Springs helped the team prepare for the Arizona tournament.

Defeated Sugar Ray Leonard retires

Associated Press

NEW YORK — It's time for Sugar Ray Leonard to hit something that doesn't hit back.

That's exactly what he's going to do.

"I want to do what I planned to do a long time ago — take golf lessons," Leonard said early Sunday following his 12-round battering by Terry Norris.

"It's time to get away physically from boxing," added Leonard, who will continue to be involved with the management of boxers.

Shortly after the end of his Madison Square Garden debut before 7,495 fans Saturday night, Leonard grabbed the ring microphone and said, "This is my last fight. Thank you for coming out. God bless you all."

Leonard, who will be 35 on May 17, had said he never again would announce his retirement.

"Trust me, this is it," Leonard said when reminded that he twice has come out of announced retirements.

Water polo team readies for tourney

By COURTNEY HOLZENDORF
Universe Sports Writer

In an effort to gain experience and prepare for upcoming tournaments, the BYU water polo team played a blue/white, intrasquad game Saturday.

In an evenly matched game, the white team defeated the blue team 13-12. Neither team led by more than three goals throughout the game.

"It went well," said coach Ray Leber. "It was an exercise to get the team some experience. We wanted to give everyone a chance to get in a game."

High scorers were Mitch Jones for the white team and Matt Crawford of the blue team, Leber said.

The Cougars next play in a tournament Feb. 23 at Arizona State University.

"We're getting ready for the tournament coming up," Crawford said. "We want to do well so we can show everyone that we can play and that we're really serious out here. Looking at the games, last week and this week, I think we have a pretty good chance."

The tournament, featuring 12 teams, will be divided into two brackets, one with eight teams and one with four. BYU will be in the eight team bracket. Leber said the Cougars should get a chance to play at least three games.

Quote of the day: "This week coming up is probably the most important week we've ever faced. We play Wyoming and BYU. If we win both games, we win the WAC."

—University of Utah forward Josh Grant, the Utes top scorer.

Cougars bowl over UTEP Miners, 90-66

By JEANA STARR
Universe Sports Writer

The BYU women's basketball team captured its first Western Athletic Conference win at home on Saturday after defeating the University of Texas at El Paso Lady Miners, 90-66 in the Marriott Center.

The Cougars took an early lead and dominated the remainder of the game.

They went into the locker room at halftime up by 11, 43-32.

Forward Lisa White gave the Cougars a bigger lead by knocking in three 3-pointers in a row, three minutes into the second half.

"It was a great game," said BYU coach Jeanie Wilson. "Everything went right for us; it's about time."

BYU held UTEP guard Holly Russ to only 15 points; nine points below her 24.8 WAC average.

"Our defense was definitely a factor in our win," Wilson said.

Forward Lisa Rathbun did well on the boards with nine rebounds. "Lisa dominated the boards the entire game," Wilson said.

Junior forward Lisa White led the Cougars with 30 points, including five 3-pointers, shooting 71 percent from the field.

"White was hot, she was hitting everything," Wilson said.

Junior guard Kimberly Talbot had 25 points, eight assists, and six rebounds, followed by junior forward Lisa Rathbun with 19 points, nine rebounds and three steals.

For the Miners it was not a night they want to remember. "The girls just did not click," said UTEP coach Sandra Rushing. "BYU is a much better team and it showed."

"BYU out-shot, out-rebounded and all around out-played us," Rushing said.

Rushing said she has nothing but respect for the Cougars. "They are a great team that has a lot of determination and dedication in the game."

"They are the ideal team I want to have," Rushing said.

For UTEP, Charsa Palamore led with 16 points, six rebounds and four steals; followed by guard Holly Russ with 15 points, five rebounds and four steals.

BYU will prepare to meet the WAC's No. 1-ranked Creighton University in Omaha, Neb., on Saturday.

Wilson said the Cougar's win against UTEP should help the team prepare for the game against Creighton.

The game between the Cougars and the Lady Jays is scheduled to begin at 7:30 p.m.

Barkley leads east All-stars to win

Associated Press

CHARLOTTE, N.C. — Charles Barkley, a reluctant All-Star, showed no reluctance to go to the basket Sunday.

The powerful forward for the Philadelphia 76ers, playing on a stress fracture in his left foot, became the MVP with 17 points and 22 rebounds, leading the East to a 116-114 victory. That was the most rebounds of any All-Star since Wilt Chamberlain grabbed 22 in 1967, but five short of Bob Pettit's 1962 record.

Barkley wanted to skip the All-Star game to rest his ailing foot, but was ordered by the NBA to appear. He missed seven games with the injury, then returned to play four times before the break.

It was the second straight season the league told Barkley to play when he preferred to recuperate. This year, he had 11 rebounds in each half for the East, which improved its All-Star game victory margin to 27-14.

The West, trailing by two points, went for a win at the end. Kevin Johnson launched a three-point try that appeared to be falling short before teammate Karl Malone tipped the ball. The call of basket interference gave the East possession with 2.9 seconds left, and Michael Jordan ran down the clock. The game was close most of the way, with 20 lead changes. The West climbed within two points four times in the final minutes without catching up.

'Lobby loving' at BYU

Dorm lovers engage in PDA

Editor's note: some names in this article have been changed to protect the guilty. The innocent have nothing to worry about.

By RUSSELL A. FOX and BRADY LONG
Universe Staff Writers

"Lobby-loving."
BYU students who began their sojourn through this institution living in on-campus housing facilities will recognize this term. It conjures up images of late nights, vinyl cushions, saliva and reprimands from the dorm mother.

As Valentine's Day approaches, the lobbies of Helaman Halls, Deseret Towers and Heritage Halls are once again filling with young people who hold hands, hold each other and hold physical affection in high regard.

Lobby-loving, like all campus traditions, has its enemies. Jen Caylor, 18, a freshman from Washington, D.C., majoring in music, described the lobby lovers in her Deseret Towers lobby as disgusting.

"I just have a problem watching someone stick their tongue into someone else's mouth," she said.

But lobby-loving has its defenders as well.

"When you're poor, inexperienced and can't get hold of a car, where else can you take a girl?" said James, a music major from New York City who wouldn't give his age.

He said he'd lip-locked many a co-ed at his Helaman Halls dorm before he ever received any trouble from dorm authorities.

"I was pretty wild, but no one cared. They just figured I was part of the scenery I suppose." James paused and shrugged. "I mean, hey, everybody does it."

Chet, another former lobby-lover, agreed, saying that lobby loving is common because it's convenient when there's no other place to go.

"The bushes are okay, but it's not really romantic enough. Besides, it's cold outside," he said.

The dorm lobbies, on the other hand, have a nice comfortable atmosphere, Chet said.

Lance, a 23-year-old art major from Orem, claims to have clocked 4900 hours on the couches at T-Hall in Deseret Towers. "It might have been longer," he said.

Lance pointed out that T-Hall was a girls' dorm. "Face it man, girls are always more loose on their own territory. Doesn't matter though. She 'Dear Johned' me while I was out serving the Lord."

Though several former lobby-lovers painted the activity in similarly casual terms, faculty managers and head residents frequently expressed concern.

Most importantly, on-campus housing guidelines, which prohibit "improper public displays of affection" need to be upheld. There is also the matter of complaints about lobby-loving arising from other residents to be considered.

"Sometimes," said David Hunt, manager of Heritage Halls, in reference to the lobby-lovers, "they just don't realize how offensive they are to others."

Chet said he never really considered the effect of he and his girlfriend's actions. "At the time it never even crossed my mind. I hope we never offended anyone."

In the end, it is apparent that while the lobby-loving tradition at BYU may be controversial, few consider it a long-term problem.

Babs, 20, an English major from Butte, Mont., said that when "you're young and on your own, you want the guy to feel important and the lobby looks real inviting. But the thrill fades fast."

Most BYU students seem to agree with that sentiment. Lobby-loving, some say, is just something you do in the dorms before college life really begins. It's a workshop for making out, if you will. A dry run for love.

But not everyone feels that way. "When my freshman year ended, our ward handed out awards for, among other things, the finest lobby-loving couples," said Russell, a 22-year-old.

He said they had the winners of the awards come forward and speak to the crowd.

"The third-place couple was so overcome by emotion they could only wave in gratitude. She married a graduate student while he was an elder in Germany," he said.

The second-place couple did a Fred Astaire-Ginger Rogers dip and started french-kissing in front of everybody, Russell said. The guy later went to Japan on a mission, and they never saw each other again.

Russell said the first-place couple — well — they stayed close and ended up getting married 10 days after he was released from his mission.

What did they do when they got their award? "They never received it," Russell said. "We couldn't find them. I think they may have been out in the lobby during the whole party."

First kisses are terrible

By MARJORIE ALLRED
Universe Staff Writer

Some girls dream about first kisses from the time they are 10. They expect their first kiss to be a sublime experience.

Actually, first kisses are terrible. Teeth clash, noses bump and most just think — this is it? This is what I've been dreaming about for years?

What is a kiss? "A kiss is a mouth full of nothing that tastes like heaven and sounds like a cow pulling his foot out of the mud," said John Abraham, a stake president from Byron, Wyo.

My first kiss met those requirements, except it really wasn't heaven. I still remember my disappointment that this was what my friends and I had spent hours talking about and preparing for. I was disgusted with the whole thing.

It happened on my first official date. There had been friendship and even a romantic declaration before this official date, and I'd been looking forward to it.

As we walked home down a dark street, arm in arm, he kind of pulled me to him and just planted one. Our teeth grated together and all I could think about was how he was slobbering on me and whether I was doing it right.

On the disgust and disappointment! Where were the shooting stars, the tingles, the sense of headiness?

Others have felt the way I have. One friend, who we'll call Jane, told of her first experience.

It was with old "fish lips," and unfortunately it was his first kiss too, Jane said. She thought he was going to swallow her.

Jane did say the kisses have improved greatly since that first time, and now she definitely enjoys them.

Celest's first kiss happened at BYU on a blind date set up by her friend's date.

The men suggested the four of them play perdidle, and Celest, not being quite sure what that was, agreed. At the end of the date, the guys demanded their perdidle reward of a kiss.

"It was gross!" she said. "Luckily things have improved since then."

Brian said he got a slap in the face on his first attempt. He was 12 years old and was walking a girl home from school. He said he didn't think the whole deal of kissing was worth it after that.

For most girls, their first kiss is usually initiated by the boy. However, poor John was practically attacked.

He was 16 and had just walked his date to the door. He was just going to give her a hug, but apparently she was expecting more and placed herself lip to lip with him.

John said he felt cheated because all this time he'd been expecting tingles, not just spit.

"I was really disappointed about it," he said.

Alyssa said she didn't know what to do. Her date had asked her out for New Year's Eve so she was expecting something. When the big moment came at the end of the date, Alyssa froze, and the kiss was a disaster. Her date was insulted because he thought she didn't know how to kiss, and Alyssa was grossed out because the one-sided kiss was so awful.

It seems that most first kisses are a disaster. Those with more experience don't talk about their first disappointing kiss, only about their improved-with-time kisses that come complete with tingles.

The adage, practice makes perfect, certainly applies to kissing. I eventually got over my first disastrous kiss and now I feel the tingles and see the shooting stars. Now a kiss is a "mouthful of heaven."
